

The pictures being shown at the Royal theater today and tomorrow of the 52nd battalion reception at the head of the lakes are well worth seeing. Manager Tremblay, of the Royal, said this morning that there was some fear the day the pictures were taken that they would not be very good, as the weather was dull, but Jack Fryer was so successful that there have not been any better photographs ever displayed at the theater. The scenes in the pictures are complete and show every detail of the reception from the time of the arrival of the troops, and following them in the procession under the arch on Victoria avenue. Special attention is called to the splendid views of many prominent citizens and the officers and men of the battalion. Anyone who sees this picture will recognize the faces of their friends, as well as seeing what will prove a splendid permanent record of the movements of the battalion of their return from active service.
