Among the local decorations for the recent reception for the 52nd battalion, those at the Royal theater caused much favorable comment, and Manager Tremblay has since been roundly complimented on the artistic and striking result produced. Colored electric lights were largely used with large "welcome" banners, but so arranged that a novel as well as pleasing design was established. A huge "W" standing for "welcome" was made with strings of lighted bulbs extending the whole width and height of the building, while softer lights behind the stained glass in the upper front of the building, gave a very pretty finishing touch to the whole.
