

cease work.

---

Lieutenant J. B. Eberts, of the royal air force, returned home Sunday morning, and is today meeting old friends. He will obtain his discharge tomorrow, but under imperial regulations is still a reservist airman. He was in the thick of some of the liveliest air fighting over the German lines last summer and fall, on one occasion having his plane riddled with machine gun bullets. He was a member of the air squads which accompanied the bombing machines to ward off attacks of the swifter and lighter enemy machines.

---

Building Inspector      McNamara